The Other Side of the World

Written by Brandon Johnson, our Ambassadoral Scholar.

October 21, 2008
Odyssey to Batad Banaue, Luzon, Philippines

Meanwhile, the Tylenol PM hadn't fulfilled its dosage, causing my eyelids to cyclically droop, then open with every thump in the road, probably convincing the Filipinos I was on drugs--which, I was. Finally, after two hour, a growling stomach and a sore but, I arrived in Banaue, the Philippines.

Banaue is a small country town, with a single road that quickly passes through a strip of rugged mini-marts, souvenir shops and motels, before continuing further into the mountains. Rest your eyes for five minutes, and you wouldn't even know it exists. As I walked through town, the hiking shoes, backpack and Caucasian face broadcasted my intentions. Dozens of Filipino tricycle drivers (motorbikes "taxis" with passenger sidecars) marketed their services: "A ride, sir?" No thanks, I'll walk. "Walk?! But it's very far!" I can do it! (I would flex my scrawny muscles to prove it.)

I bought some hiking snacks from the local food mart and chatted with the owner, Ray, about Barack Obama's chances for presidency. I ate a hearty breakfast of wild rice, fried eggs and organic coffee at the "Las Vegas Cafe"---oddly, no resemblance to the city whatsoever---where the owner Leo recounted stories of his hometown, enjoying the company of his only customer.

Please don't forget to sign in at every meeting!
